Daddy taught me how to jump a car battery, change a flat tire, explained why to keep two car lengths apart while driving, and to do the regular maintenance on any car I owned or would own. He also would slip me extra money to put toward purchasing a car. That was our big secret. He also, by example, taught me a good work ethic. It was always neat to see military vehicles in the driveway when he'd come home from work. They were fun to "drive"...lol. Daddy was proud to have served in The Ohio National Guard. I was proud of him as well. He is now where he should be,in his mansion heaven. I was and am honored to be his daughter. Love much and will miss you much. Til I see ya again, I will carry on. Love you daddy.

Our families grew up in the same neighborhood, so we kids often played at each other's homes. I remember one time my older brother came home and said Mr. Morrow had c-rations (military type food) in the trunk of his car. I just thought was the coolest thing to have, if you ever got hungry--just pull over and eat some:)
