“ Mom this is a funny memory. I love to remember it. I remember the day that aunt pat took me to see the Popeye Movie and I was all ready to eat that spinach, you and I went to the grocery store very soon after that movie, and while Popeye was all I could think about at that time because he got super strong and was able to put his rival back in line. so while you and I were in the grocery store I seen that darn can of spinach. and I begged and begged and begged you to buy it. And as I was sitting in the cart explaining to you why I wanted it so very badly. I remember the wonderful smile on your face. and then you said to me "are you sure scotty" I said yep. we got home and you cooked it up for me. And I ate one bite and about threw up in my mouth, and you told me I had to finish it to get big and strong like Popeye, And then you said "But that one little bite you had would not work". and wow I sat there looking at this pile of dark green??? for a few moments and tried again, and then again, and started to cry saying "but I want to be like Popeye". this is when you gave me a great big hug and said oh scotty your already my little Popeye.

No Body will ever understand just how much I love you mom. I've lost everyone of you now, and mom. I thought you had more life to live, gosh we all did. I watched you get sick and then sicker over time, I have seen you suffer all of my life. I have seen you do nothing but try to be the very best for everyone around you. and while you were the best mother ever you were also so very sick you never said a word about it and if asked you would say I am fine.. you just kept on keeping on. your a great momma and a great friend. we are all very lost right now without you, many of us tried to prepare for this moment, and we all agree, there is not enough preparation for something like this, but you can tell yourself over and over to be ready for the worst pain you have ever had on this earth. the loss of A mother A father, And Wife or Brother and a Sister or Uncle, or A Grandpa and Grandma. its all so very painful. for now momma i will continue to show the world what you made of me. you made me a wonderful person and Man, I will continue to reach out and show the world you made no mistakes in me,

“ I will miss my mothers wonderful smile and warm hugs, her awesome kindness and selflessness. My mother fought a Long battle with Crones disease and still she smiled everyday she was to darn stubborn to ever give up, she was amazingly strong and her strength is something I will always cherish and Admire.
